1.4 Content: Impact of Partition on Women

Partition is a tragedy of the twentieth century with the millions of people displaced and one million or more killed in communal violence and rioting as Partition resettlement occurred. India's Partition exemplifies the failures of colonial rule, violence from fear of persecution, and violence caused from uncertainty. Colonial politics, Partition, and subsequent policies of the Indian government have limited and controlled women's agency in a variety of ways. Partition is a tragedy because it resulted in millions of displacements and deaths. Even without the millions of deaths from sectarian violence, Partition would still be a tragedy because mass displacement is an atrocity in and of itself. Those who lived through partition ultimately lost their homes and roots in a violent way because of a state mandated decision. The nature of loss caused by partition makes it difficult or impossible to revisit and identify with one's roots. In addition, the organization, The 1947 Partition Archive claims that there is widespread public amnesia regarding Partition.

1.4.1. Partition: Political Consequences

Partition was about two specific incisions. Firstly, the territorial incision emerged from a political conflict over the ownership of a state – a conflict about who ought to acquire the moral and legitimate authority over the entire population and colonized territory left by the British Raj. Secondly, the creation of Pakistan was a partition not simply of the subcontinent but also of the Indian Muslim community itself.

During and after Partition, women in India have participated in politics, joined the workforce, taken care of their families and communities, and worked hard to resist oppressive structures of the colonially-imposed rules of the state. Following partition, there was widespread violence and massacre on both sides of the border. Those who lived through partition almost universally recall seeing a variety of forms of violence and brutality. The violence was especially brutal in communities along the border of India and Pakistan, which was very hastily drawn by the British. Much of the violence was centered in Punjab, which was effectively sliced in half during Partition.

Historically, the violence is remembered as senseless. However, India in the 1940s was also a highly weaponized and militarized society, with one-third of eligible men serving in the army at some point. With military training, these men who had served in the army were well-trained in modern weaponry and were able to organize and direct attacks. Villages, trains, and refugee camps were all targets of attacks. Trains were an especially common target of violence and contented peasant woman without any trace of bitterness for her sufferings. The party is disturbed by the melodramatic entry of Kishen's cousins Pratap and Khushwant. They enter as dishevelled fakirs. They prostrate in front of Sikander and his mother and request for forgiveness for the sins of their forefathers during the Partition. Everyone is stunned by their behaviour. In the beginning, reminded of her unspoken experiences of abduction and rape, Ammijee becomes violent and curses her offenders. But soon she controls her emotions and forgives the two Sikhs; and ultimately their forefathers. She tells them that she has forgiven her abductors long ago so as to continue her life.

The story ends with the poem 'Defend yourself against me' by a Bolivian poet which summarizes the fate of women who are 'the spoils of war'.

1.2.3 Themes in the story

In 'Defend yourself against me', Bapsi Sidhwa has made a comment on the brutalities of communal hatred. It is a story of revisiting a past long buried in the consciousness of the victims of communal crimes. The story deals with various themes like silence about the women's fate, violence against women during social disturbances, human compassion and cultural assimilation.

1. Violence against women during the partition:

Mrs. Jacobs describes the vulnerability of women as, "The vulnerability of mothers, daughters, granddaughters, and their metamorphosis into possessions; living objects on whose soft bodies victors and losers alike vent their wrath, enact fantastic vendettas, celebrate victory."

In 'Nation' ideology, a nation is given the metaphor of 'a mother' giving birth to its children (citizens). So, the women who bear children become an asset of a community. Their bodies become carriers of reproductivity, sexuality and ultimately, the symbols of the community's pride. When a community is under attack, its weak point i.e. its women are targeted by the offenders. During wars, riots and communal unrest, women of the opposite party are kidnapped, raped, mutilated and murdered brutally. This is done in order to destroy the honour, sanctity and integrity of the entire community and to take revenge. That's why 'women become the spoils of war' as Mrs. Khan in the story puts it.

During the Partition of India, women became soft targets of public violence. The mutual hatred and distrust among the Hindus and the Muslims resulted into mass murder, herself to the upliftment of women and also had faith in her fellow men. However, all her faith is shattered during the communal riots. With the help of her Muslim friend, Jyoti tries to flee across the border; but is raped brutally in imprisonment. That hate and shame of being pregnant with the child of rape results into her disdain for the baby.

Jyoti delivers the baby away from the camp, in darkness, under a tree. Her first instinct is to smother the baby to death. But, the baby's cry feels her up with a motherly instinct. 'It is so compelling....like the assertion of ...an appeal to nature....' She even tries to run away abandoning the baby. The mother inside her is confused. She understands that even if she abandons the baby, her future life will be shadowed by the sense of guilt. Finally, the storm and struggle in her mind subsides. She lifts up the baby to warmth and returns to the camp.

2.2.3 Theme of the story

1. Predicament of women in communal riots

Women are victimised during the Partition because they have always been considered less than human - a commodity, a possession or an object of lust. The chastity of women marks the superiority of the culture. Their bodies symbolize the community's purity. So, during the communal riots at the time of the Partition, women became the soft targets. They were mass murdered, raped and kidnapped. Later, many of them were rescued and exchanged to their own lands across the border. However, due to the stigma of being violated and impure, in many cases, these recovered women were not accepted back in their family. This rejection resulted in their social deaths. Also, these women had no choice or say in the way they wished to live out the rest of their lives. They were not treated as humans, but as property to be returned to their respective owners. If rejected, they were put into rehabilitation camps. Those who got pregnant from rapes were forced to undergo abortion or were persuaded to abandon such children as they would be unacceptable to their families.

Many women refused to return to their families because of the perceived stigma attached to them. Jyoti also hesitates to go to the refugee camp and be exchanged across the border. She has to be forced into the vehicle bound for the camp. All the time, she tries to hide the fact that she is unmarried and pregnant. She hates the seed of rape, plans to kill it in

Report on the 'One Day Workshop on Gender Equality while Celebrating 75th' years of Indian Independence'

Title: One Day Workshop on 'One Day Workshop on Gender Equality while Celebrating 75th' years of Indian Independence'

Committee: Lead College

Chairperson: Dr. Yojana Jugale (Principal)

Resource Person: Dr. S. V. Sarvade and Dr. Deepa Shravasti

Day and Date: Thursday, 31 March 2022

Place: Seminar Hall

Participation: Faculty and Students from five colleges, total 40

Objectives: (1) To introduce the concept of Gender; (2) To make students aware of position of women throughout history; (3) To make students aware of the derogatory pasteurization of women in social and print media

Brief Report

At the outset, the workshop was inaugurated by resource persons and chairperson. Then, Dr. Niranjan Kulkarni introduced the objectives of the lead college program and the workshop. The resource persons were felicitated by the chairperson.

The first resource person was Dr. S. V. Sarvade. She is a historian with a specialization in Feminist History. She took a brief review of the position of women through out various stages in history. She also informed about rare examples of women-protest in the course of history. Then, the second resource person Dr. Deepa Shravasti shared her thought. She made the participants aware of the importance of social and print media in structuring social psyche. With apt examples, she made them understood the derogatory pasteurization of women in the media and its harmful impact on the life of women.

During valedictory session, some of the faculty and students expression their views on the workshop. The program occluded with vote of thanks.

Outcome: (1) Students understood the concept of Gender; (2) Students learned about the position of women throughout history; (3) Students became alert of the derogatory pasteurization of women in social and print media.
