About Conference

Concept Note: Blue Humanities, as a branch of environmental humanities studies how literature, cinema, history and culture represent and respond to the issues related to the aquatic environment. It discusses water pollution, coastal ecology and loss of marine ecosystem, climate change impact on the ocean, river degradation and water scarcity, etc. Similarly, Green Humanities-another branch of Environmental Humanities-examines how human beings interact with land, forests, and the surrounding natural environment. Environmental issues related to the land and the nature viz. deforestation, soil degradation, agricultural crisis, the conflict between human beings and wild-life species, climate change impact on the land and environmental pollution, etc are the major concerns of Green Humanities. Literature and cinema are the most powerful cultural channels that critically discuss and reimagine these pressing environmental and ecological issues. They not only represent environmental realities but also influence public perception in a positive way cultivating sustainable approach in them. From eco-fiction to regional literature and from documentary films to parallel cinema to mainstream movies, we can learn and understand different dimensions of environmental change. Contemporary green literature and parallel cinemas bring forth major environmental issues that are discussed in blue-green humanities. They deliberate upon the issues like farmer suicide, deforestation, urban ecology, global warming and climate vulnerability. They also emphasize the importance of traditional ecological knowledge, local and grass-root movements and environmental activism. Considering these aspects, this conference aims to foster a deeper understanding of ecological practices and sustainable approaches advocated by the literature and cinema. By integrating literary studies, film studies and environmental sciences, the conference pursues to create a platform for collaborative knowledge production focusing on the following sub-themes:
